

Sexual Health Jeopardy - Instructions

First, choose which topics you wish to cover. You can choose to play with all 10 topics if you have a longer period of time, or you can select as many topics as you would like. Lay the cards out on a table with the question/answer side face down. If you are working with a larger group of participants and cannot all gather around one table, you may choose to attach the cards to a wall or blackboard. Split the group into teams (2 – 4) and decide collectively whether or not you want to keep score and/or name the teams and who will go first. Have each team identify a person who will be responsible for answering on behalf of their group.

When it is their turn, each team can select which category they wish to answer from and for what amount of points (10, 20, 30, 40, or 50). The questions labeled 10 are the easiest and they get progressively more difficult. Once a team selects a question, you can give them a minute to agree on an answer and then have their speaker provide their response. If they get it wrong, the other teams have an opportunity to steal the points. You can do this based on which other team puts up their hand first, or buzzes in, if you are using buzzers.

As you go through the questions, stop to provide explanations around any topics/ answers that the participants are unclear about. For example, for the Safer Sex question, “What do you need to check a condom package for before opening it?” you can bring a condom with you to demonstrate and allow the participants to check the condom themselves. Expand on each of the questions to clarify that participants are learning and retaining the information.

You will need:

- Sexual Health Jeopardy question cards
- Condoms
- Pen/paper to keep score
- Tape/Magnets to attach to board/wall (optional)
- Buzzers (optional)
